This special issue contains six papers written by leading researchers in knowledge discovery in bioinformatics. The topics covered here range from mining protein interaction networks to discovering significant motifs in molecules including DNA, RNA and proteins. These motifs are crucial in regulation of gene expression or in protein classification. Together, the six papers report on recent advances in the field, address challenges faced by bioinformaticians working in the field, and point out promising directions for future research.

Guest Editor
Jason T. L. Wang
Guest Editor
IJKDB