Acknowledgment

We are honored and pleased to acknowledge and appreciate the invaluable contribution of different direct and indirect contributors to the initiation, development, and publication of this book. We sincerely say “Thank you very much indeed” to all those scholars, professors, students, administrators, and institutions of higher education from whom we have learned to develop and share knowledge, and from whom we have derived theories, concepts, and models, available in either a printed format or digital format, to define and build up this collaborative research and publication effort. We have tried, our humanly possible best, to award them with their due credits explicitly in the write up of the book. Notwithstanding, we respectfully admit that it is beyond the scope of this page to send written tributes and admiration to all those role models and knowledge leaders in the fields of business management education in particular and higher education in general.

We are also grateful for the opportunity and guidance provided by IGI Global and its wonderful collaborators for their timely and friendly advisory support. Of course, our hats are off to those scholars in the field of higher education who reviewed the chapters of the book and provided inspiring ideas and enriching observations about the quality, content, and structure of the write-up of the book.

We really appreciate the insight and direction provided by Dr. Ilan Alon of Rollins College, Florida, USA and Dr. John R. McIntyre, Georgia Tech, USA, in the initial stages of the development of this book.

Last but not the least, we thank our talented and hardworking students at EGADE-Business School of Tecnológico de Monterrey, México, namely Victor, Bryant, and Jessy for their precious time and willingness to read the chapters of the book as critical readers and for cross-checking the references. They provided useful and timely feedback on reference corrections, spellings and grammar omissions and commissions, and the overall readability and continuity of the text.

Thank you all.
