Acknowledgment

The editor acknowledges the help of persons and organizations that made this laudable book project a dream come true. First, the concerted efforts of all the contributing authors, the reviewers, and members of the Editorial Advisory Board (EAB) are sincerely appreciated.

The idea of the book project stemmed from my postdoctoral research fellowship that I was awarded by The Alexander von Humboldt Foundation (AvH). I am indebted to the AvH foundation for providing support for my stay in Germany and to my two host institutions, German Institute for Global and Area Studies, Hamburg, and German Development Institute, Bonn. In this regard, I acknowledge the intellectual stimulation received from colleagues in both institutes, especially my host supervisors, Jany Lay and Michael Bruentrup. Appreciation also goes to the management of Covenant University for approving my research leave, which gave me the requisite mental anchorage and stability to concentrate on the research project that has now come to full fruition.

Further, it is important to mention that the call for proposals to develop chapters of the book enjoyed a wide circulation and enthusiastic responses, as can be seen in diversity of the contributions both in terms of discipline and number of countries. Thanks are due to the various networks that helped in widely disseminating the information, which include UNCTAD Virtual Institute, Swedish Institute Alumni, Global Research Forum on Diaspora and Transnationalism, African Finance and Economic Association (AFEA), African Growth and Development Policy Modeling Consortium (AGRODEP), The Partnership for African Social and Governance Research (PASGR), Association of African Young Economists (AAYE), among others.

Last but not the least, I appreciate the Almighty God “from whom all blessings flow” and my family members for their moral support, which provided a veritable platform for focusing on my core assignments.

Evans Osabuohien
Covenant University, Nigeria & German Development Institute, Germany