I would like to acknowledge individuals and groups who have made significant contributions to a successful completion of the project within 15 months.

First of all, I want to thank Arlene Harris and Martin Cooper for writing the extremely insightful Foreword to the Encyclopedia. Known as the First Lady of Wireless, Arlene Harris is a real model for all young women in the world to become entrepreneurs, inventors, investors, and advocates. Known as the Father of Mobile Phones, Martin Cooper is a real model for all young men in the world, who grew up from a modest immigrant family in the depression era of Chicago and became one of the most celebrated inventors, entrepreneurs, and executives. To me, Marty is one of the most genuine, generous, humane, and thoughtful minds that I have ever interacted with personally and professionally.

Secondly, two major publications truly pioneered a new field and have produced strong intellectual impacts and inspirations on my work in editing the Encyclopedia. One is the Handbook of Mobile Communication Studies, edited by Dr. James Katz at Boston University and published by the MIT Press in 2008. Another is the Encyclopedia of Mobile Computing and Commerce, edited by Dr. David Taniar at Monash University and published by IGI Global in 2007. Because of their works, we are able to stand on the shoulders of giants and build upon important contributions of these two books to make a strong encyclopedia on mobile phone behaviors for hundreds of readers in the world.

I would like to thank all IGI Global staff members involved in the project: Kayla Wolfe, Acquisitions Editor, Allison McGinniss, Acquisitions Editorial Assistant, Lindsay Johnston, Managing Director, Austin DeMarco, Managing Editor, Jan Travers, Director of Intellectual Property and Contracts, Christine Smith, Development Editor, and Erin O’Dea, Assistant Managing Editor, for their prompt responses and good guidance. I am particularly grateful to Jan Travers for her profound knowledge and wise counsel and to Austin DeMarco for his extremely thoughtful problem-solving ability.

I would like to thank particularly each of the five editorial board members, Dr. Karel Brookhuis, Dr. Scott Campbell, Dr. Kurt Fischer, Dr. James Katz, and Dr. Matthew Schneps for their extremely knowledgeable and insightful advice. In every sense of the word, Dr. Schneps is both an exemplary model of mobile phone research and a true dyslexic hero using technologies to fight against developmental disorders and to obtain extraordinary life achievements.

I really thank all the reviewers for their time and work reviewing all the proposals and chapters timely and constructively.

I want to say a special thank you to my outstanding doctoral students, especially Sung Yong Park, Quan Chen, and Samantha Bordoff, for their countless hours of hard work and good work as outstanding editorial managers and editorial assistants, even during the busy midterm exams and weekends, especially after Sung Yong’s laptops were stolen due to the midnight house break-in. I really appreciate Dr. Newman, the long-time director of the Educational Psychology Program at UAlbany, for the timely assigning of multiple graduate assistants to me during the period of editing the Encyclopedia.

Finally, I thank all the authors who contributed to the Encyclopedia. Without each and every one of them, this large-scale project would have simply been impossible to complete.
