Acknowledgment

The book is the result of the hard work of the contributing authors and Board members and many others. I cordially give a big thank you to everyone who has shared their expertise and valuable time to the publication of this work. Among those, I would like to give thanks first to the Editorial Board members: Dr. Noran Moffett, Dr. He Mingfang, Dr. Emily Williams, Dr. Valerie Pang, Dr. Carol Tanksley, Dr. Godfrey Franklin, and Dr. Joyce Nichols. They have graciously agreed to serve as board members of the book among their busy schedules and millions of things that deserve their attention and time. During the process and progress of the book project, they have offered expertise, vision, and practical guidance on book direction, chapter selection, and further reviewing of chapters to be included in the book. In other words, from the beginning of the project to the final steps of the work, board members participated and contributed to their fullest.

In addition to the contribution from the Editorial Board members, this book also benefitted greatly from the support and assistance from contributing authors and others in the field of diversity and multiculturalism. I greatly appreciate the time, interests, and availability and efforts of the following individuals:

Dr. Noran Moffett, Dr. Molly Zhou, Dr. Andrea Lewis, Dr. Christina Smith, Dr. Gwendolyn Etter-Lewis, Dr. Imani Scott, Dr. Nonofo losike-Sedimon, Dr. Nichole Taylor, and Dr. Mahauganee Shaw. A big “thank you” is not nearly enough to express my appreciation of their support and efforts in the reviewing process. Without their support, the book would not have become available to the public as designed.

A saying states that “one hand does not clap; the voice of millions of people can shake heaven and earth.” Because all the support, guidance, and contribution from board members and peer reviewing members on their valuable time and availability, this book came into being finally.

At this time of excitement and applause at the finish line of this project, I would also like to say thank you to three special individuals from IGI Global: Vince
D’Imperio, Hayley Kang, and Brandon Carbaugh. These individuals have offered their professional advice and assistance during the beginning of the project, developmental process of the project, and the conclusion of the project. Without their timely feedback, and availability to help from chapter proposal webpage design, to chapter peer-reviewing, to chapter organization, and online submission problem solving of chapter authors, the project would not have been in its current status.

Diversity and multiculturalism has been and will always be a theme of academic discussion, professional work, and center of education due to the fact that American society is one with rich diversity and great potential for elaboration, collaboration, and blossom of diversity and diversity is also an element of our human world outside of the US. It is my hope this book can offer a channel to contribute to the work and efforts done in advancing diversity and humanity. More, better, and higher are always the goal as a society is moving along the line of democracy. This project is only a small piece of that process. Look forward to more work to come in the near future.

Molly Zhou
Dalton State College, USA