Acknowledgment

I wish to thank everyone who contributed to making this book possible. The enthusiasm from the reviewers in acknowledged. I extend my gratitude and appreciation to this seemingly tireless group of academics. In particular a special thanks goes to my esteemed colleague and co-editor Dr. John Lenarcic; I particularly valued his initial philosophical argument and encouragement for undertaking this publication in the first instance. The review results were sent to each primary chapter author as constructive recommendations to improve their work. This type of supportive collegial environment continues my goal to promote the best quality research and project findings into the future. To the countless number of proofreaders, your scholarly efforts are appreciated by experienced academics as well as those new to this type of dissemination; to Keven Asquith for his home-front support and tireless reading of early material. To those authors of the chapters not selected for publication, please know that your efforts are acknowledged with thankfulness; at times, selection decisions were most difficult, with topic coverage dictating final acceptance.

I would also like to express my gratitude to RMIT University, for providing me with time away from School activities to complete the book. To the staff at IGI Global, thank you all for the continued professional advice that was always forthcoming in timely manner throughout the year long preparation process; the co-editors appreciated your understanding when our publication submission was delayed and for granting the authorship (and ourselves) a much needed extension beyond our original publication arrangements.
