I would like to acknowledge the help of all the people who made this book possible. Firstly, I would like to thank all the authors for their contributions. My sincere gratitude goes to the chapter authors who contributed their time and expertise to this book in terms of extending and enhancing their original International Journal of Mobile Human-Computer Interaction (IJMHCI) articles into the book chapters you see here. I would also like to say a special thanks to Jesper Kjeldskov for his introduction which does just what I hoped it would do when I invited him to contribute to this publication – it challenges us to consider adopting new perspectives on what we do!

Although not directly involved in the review of these chapters, I would also like to acknowledge the valuable contributions of the IJMHCI reviewing team (associate editors and editorial review board members) whose tireless work in reviewing the original submissions to the IJMHCI led to the quality of publications which have since evolved into the chapters presented here.

Finally, there is one individual without whom I could not have delivered this publication. Dr Victoria Lush is as post-doc research associate who worked meticulously with me to ensure that the chapters met the enhancement criteria, oftentimes copy-editing chapters on behalf of authors to ensure publication standards were upheld. I would like to thank Victoria both personally but also on behalf of the authors.

Joanna Lumsden
School of Engineering and Applied Science, Aston University, UK