The editor acknowledges the support and efforts of a number of colleagues. First and foremost, I would like to thank the contributors to this book, the 32 authors and co-authors from academia as well as industry from around the world who collectively developed and submitted a total of 14 chapters. Without their efforts in developing quality chapters conforming to the required guidelines, and meeting often the strict deadlines, this text would not have been possible. Their names and brief biographical notes are listed in a separate section at the end of this book.

Secondly, my grateful thanks are due to the members of the advisory and editorial board of this book who willingly volunteered their time in reviewing the book chapters and providing further advisory and editorial support. Their names and affiliations also appear in a separate section in this book.

Finally, I would like to thank members of my immediate family, especially Rehana Mahmood, for her encouragement and moral support and for happily allowing me time to devote to the development of this, 5th, in a series of reference books on electronic government.

Thank you all, most heartily.

\textit{Zaigham Mahmood}
\textit{University of Derby, UK & North West University, South Africa}
\textit{February 2015}