Acknowledgment

First, I would like to thank the authors who contributed. Every chapter requires a lot of expertise and effort. The authors had to come up with original ideas, conduct the research work, write their chapters, and go through a process of peer critique and revision. They have to have the professional trust to share their work broadly in the present and for those who may use this book into the future. From the outside, these aspects may seem fairly simple, but in fact, they are not. Even the work of coming up with original insights and ways to frame the work involves the need to stay up-to-date on the research literature, on in-field techniques, and on a wide range of software tools. The authors have to be in good standing with their respective workplace organizations. The authors have to practice professional self-discipline if they are working alone, and they have to collaborate well with colleagues if they are collaborating on a team. To the authors goes my deepest gratitude.

Next, I would like to extend my thanks to the editorial advisory board members. They were a source of encouragement throughout the work. Nancy Hays, editor of EDUCAUSE Review Online, wrote a spectacular foreword as well further, she is a constant source of friendly professional support, for which I am deeply grateful. I am grateful, too, that they lent their good names and prestige to this project.

Finally, the personnel at IGI-Global were supportive as always. Every book project requires a team to actualize, and I am grateful for their support. Their new book system has made the process easier. Austin DeMarco was especially supportive and has my gratitude.
