Acknowledgment

It is important for me to take this opportunity to acknowledge the many people that worked hard to ensure that this special book came to light. This unique volume is an international collaborative effort that produced chapters from an esteemed multidisciplinary team of educators and researchers based in eight countries (Australia, Canada, Egypt, New Zealand, Oman, Thailand, United States and Qatar).

I would like to give my heartfelt thanks to each and every one of the authors and reviewers who played vital roles in working to make this book a reality. During this lengthy process, we relied almost exclusively on the Internet as our primary mode of communication. By having access to such great technology as the Internet, everyone was able to work tirelessly for a year on the project. This dedicated team of researchers were motivated by the belief that children with chronic diseases and the challenges that they and their family members face at school is a subject of great importance on a global level. It is a topic that educators worldwide need to finally address and seek collective solutions.

Although this has been a long journey, it has been a privilege to work with such a talented group of experts and I think readers will benefit greatly from the wealth of current and innovative information provided in this final product.
