To my mother and father, Anna (Pillersdorf) and Henryk Russ, who instilled in me the most important values to live by: learning and integrity. Learning is not a means to an end; in order for progress to occur, what matters most is the journey on which the learner—no matter how excruciating it is—must be critically honest with himself within his circles of life and the world. May their memory live forever.