Acknowledgment

I would like to thank my co-editors Dr. Peggy Daniels Lee and Mr. George VandeWerken for all their advice, help, recommendations, and support with this book. It was indeed a wonderful academic experience working with them on this book project. I wish to acknowledge my dean, Dr. Anna Rominger, and Dr. Ken Carow, dean at the Kelley School of Business, Indianapolis for their encouragement and support of my research interests and efforts in high-speed rail; and to Dean Carow for kindly referring me to one of his faculty members, Peggy Lee, to make up our book editorial team.

I would also like to thank my friend Dennis Hodges, Vice President, Business Relations with Indiana Passenger Rail Alliance. Dennis, a pioneer in the high-speed rail movement especially in Indiana, has been a major inspirational source for my passion and interest in high-speed rail research and has helped immensely through his networking contacts on various aspects of this book project.

I would like to thank my wife, Revathi Rebecca, my daughter Roshini Isabell, and my son Roshan Isaac for their total, continually growing love, patience, support, and encouragement.

Above all, I would like to thank my Lord Jesus for everything, and I wish to dedicate this book to Him all for His glory…Colossians 3:17.

The chapters that I have helped to write for this book would not have happened without the encouragement and support of a number of colleagues and friends. I am grateful to David Harvey, a banking colleague and friend, who encouraged my initial interest in public transportation. In addition, Dennis Hodges, the founding member of the Indiana High Speed Rail Association (now known as the Indiana Passenger Rail Alliance) reached out and invited me to join that organization and become a board member. That experience provided greater exposure to the fascinating topic of public transportation and whetted my appetite for more. Finally, I am especially grateful for the encouragement of Raj Selladurai, my co-author and friend, whose enthusiasm for this topic and desire to capture new ways of thinking about familiar transportation topics has been a catalytic inspiration.

Many thanks to my co-authors for giving me the opportunity to be a part of a great editorial team. Any work would not be possible without the assistance of those who support us in our endeavors. Thus, I am also grateful to Donald McCray, who as a freshman at the Kelley School of Business Indianapolis, who worked on the literature review; the Kelley Indianapolis faculty secretaries; Kenneth Carow, Associate Dean for Research and Programs at Kelley Indianapolis, for getting me involved in the project initially; and to all of my colleagues at Kelley Indianapolis for their constant support and encouragement.
