Acknowledgment

As editors of this volume, we first thank IGI for the opportunity to publish such an important collection on the integrative focus and the need for greater workforce diversity programs, curriculum, and degrees in higher education. We thank our authors who have graciously shared their insights, knowledge, and research for this publication. We thank our reviewers for their timely feedback and suggestions that contributed to the success and quality of this volume. Also, we thank our Editorial Advisory Board members for serving in this capacity.

Chaunda thanks her colleagues at Teacher’s College-Columbia University and the Harvard Graduate School of Education for their encouragement and support. She thanks the Black Faculty Network from the School of Education and Human Services at Oakland University for the encouragement and excitement they provided for this project.

Jeanetta thanks her doctoral faculty at the University of Oklahoma as well as her colleagues who are affiliated with the National Communication Association Black Caucus and African American Communication and Culture Division for their encouragement and support.

We also thank our existing institutions for the support they have provided to us in implementing our respective workforce diversity programs; we acknowledge Oakland University, which houses the Diverse Voices Conference that Chaunda founded and the University of Central Oklahoma, which houses Diverse Student Scholars that Jeanetta founded. This institutional support has provided us space to give voice to workforce diversity through our teaching, research, and service efforts.

Most importantly, we thank our families for providing their love and encouragement while we worked many hours on this project. We appreciate their patience and steadfast support.
