Acknowledgment

In the beginning the members of the Editorial Group would like to express their sincere gratitude and thanks for the contribution of all the young enthusiastic scholars who have responded to the “Call for Papers,” and agreed to submit a chapter for the book entitled, “Discourse Analysis as a Tool for Understanding Gender Identity, Representation and Equality.”

The book is unique in the sense that it is based on a collection of essays written by amateur young intellectuals who often find it very difficult to secure a space for their publication. Without their contribution this book could not have final shape as it is today.

The editorial members would like to acknowledge the constant assistance of all those designated reviewers involved in the review process and drafting of the book. In this regard, I, as the Chief Editor would like to express my heartfelt thanks and gratitude to all my members of the editorial group for their continuous input, cooperation and support without which the book could not have been developed, completed and submitted to the publisher.

We would like to offer our appreciation and thanks to all the authors, co-authors for their excellent and expert contribution in their relevant areas of knowledge. Without their insight and patience in rewriting their essays repeatedly based on the comments of the reviewers, it would not have been possible to complete a book with such diversity of issues on the concept of gender and its related terminologies. Almost all the papers submitted focuses on the relevance of the different sections and each dealt with appropriateness and accuracy in the area of concern.

In particular, thanks are due to our colleagues at IGI, who has given us the opportunity to edit a book in such an important area of concern of the Gender Spectrum. Special thanks are due to Meghan Lamb who helped us in the initial period for her constant motivation, advice, assistance in planning and designing the scope of the book, and presently to Courtney Tychinski for continuously helping us in every details and giving us a time extension for submission. Without their consideration, it could have been possible to edit a book with such diversity and the different dimensions of gender discourse.

Finally, immense thanks to our two very bright and vibrant members of the editorial group, that is, Aditi Sabur and Abu Saleh Mohammad Sowad who joined us in the last stage and helped us with all the work of arranging and compilation of chapters. Their skill, expertise and determination in getting the work done within the given schedule is worthy of praise and appreciation for the whole team.

Nazmunnessa Mahtab
University of Dhaka, Bangladesh

Sara L. Parker
Liverpool John Moores University, UK

Farah Kabir
Action Aid, Bangladesh

Tania Haque
University of Dhaka, Bangladesh

Aditi Sabur
University of Dhaka, Bangladesh

Abu Saleh Mohammad Sowad
University of Dhaka, Bangladesh