Acknowledgment

In acknowledging the Almighty God for His wonderful and continued support, the beauty and wonders of His Creation, the need to respect the sanctity and preservation of the environments with which we have all been blessed, and for which we are all held accountable - some to greater extent than others, this publication and volume is also fondly dedicated to, and commemorates the seventieth birthday of my beloved mum - who for me, and to all who knew her, remains an ultimate role model and embodiment of the ultimate regality.

The publication of this volume would definitely not have been possible without the commitment, teamwork and support of the Project Development and Editorial Team of IGI Global. The editor wishes to express gratitude for the hard work and efforts dedicated towards the quality and product of this publication.

Chapter 5, “Corporate Social Responsibility and Foreign Direct Investment: Engaging Innovation, Auditors, and Stakeholders in Corporate Social Responsibility,” is adapted from collaborative work with Professor James (Jim) DiGabrielle, “Achieving Amicable Settlements and Possible Reconciliations: The Role of Forensic Accountants in Equitable Distributions.” And also many thanks for entrusting me with all his original texts to be incorporated in the original and this chapter.

To my wonderful “General” and incredible gem: “a whole lot of history, we surely do have … could be the greatest team the world have ever seen…(seriously!)… You and me got a whole lot of history … So don’t let it go – we can surely make some more…”

Many thanks also to the reviewers who have invested much time, as well as expertise in contributing towards the refinement and quality of the volume. Acknowledgements are also to be given to the original publishers and editors of Chapter 11 “Foreign Direct Investment in China: Its Impact on Economic Growth (Revisited)” – The Asian Academic Research Journals (AARJ). This chapter is a radically revised and updated response to the paper that was originally published in 2013 as: “Foreign Direct Investment in China: Its Sectoral and Aggregate Impact on Economic Growth” (AARJSH vol. 1, issue 18, December 2013, ISSN: 2278-859X, first published by Asian Academic Research Associates Journals).

Due acknowledgement is also given to the publishers of the original version of Chapter 12 “Practical Training and the Audit Expectations Gap: The Case of Accounting Undergraduates of Universiti Utara Malaysia”, Journal of Financial Reporting and Accounting, 2008, vol. 6, issue 1, Emerald Publications.

Finally very many thanks also to all the contributors to this volume for their innovative inputs, original ideas, contributions to the reviews, as well as their investment in generating a high quality volume which it is hoped, will not only contribute to future research practically, as well as theoretically, but will also generate productive results which will make positive contributions to the vital and importance field of Foreign Direct Investment, as well as commitments, increased efforts and more positive attitudes towards improved environmental standards, successful poverty alleviation programs and energy subsidy reforms, all of which are aimed at contributing to global growth and development.

As evidenced by the range and diversity of contributors to this volume, it is hoped that such cooperation and diversity, as illustrated, will also help enlighten about the positive attributes and results that can be generated when global cooperation and collaboration is fostered in the realization of worthwhile objectives which do not only bear regional consequences, but also have far reaching repercussions.
