Acknowledgment

From Charles Prince:

First and foremost, I want to thank my God who has blessed me through it all. I want to thank my wife, Imani, and my family for all of their support as I embarked on this new project. I also want to thank many of my colleagues and graduate students at Howard University who also supported me through mentorship, collaboration and moral support. Finally, I want to thank my mentor Dr. Scott J. Dantley who believed in me and encouraged me to complete this level of work early in my career. A special thank you goes to my Co-Editor in this project, Dr. Rochelle Ford. Without her, I would not have been able to grow as a professional and complete this project.

From Rochelle Ford:

First giving honor to my God for making all things possible in my life, especially allowing me to contribute this book. Secondly, to Charles Prince for inviting me along on this journey. Also a special thank you to Syracuse University, SI Newhouse School of Public Communications for underwriting my research assistants who worked so hard on this book with Charles and me: Shuyi Li, Chuchu “Laura” Wang, Yaojun “Harry” Yan, Jasmine Vickers, and Chantre Smith.

A special thank you to my academic mentors and role models: Barbara B. Hines, Jannette L. Dates, Alvin Thonton, Robert Smith and John Gardner. Thank you for your encouragement.

I truly appreciate all of the reviewers, authors and contributors. With your help, this book hopefully will help HBCUs continue to grow and improve so that they can continue to touch lives and communities in meaningful ways.

Finally, thank you to my Howard University family for teaching me as a 17-year-old girl and helping me to become a woman, leader, researcher and professional in four years and for developing me as a scholar from my first appointment as lecturer.
in 1998 when I was completing my doctorate to becoming a tenured full professor and administrator in the “School of C.” I owe so much to Howard University, and I will continue to “sing of thee” and contribute to her future.

Charles B. W. Prince
Howard University, USA

Rochelle L. Ford
Syracuse University, USA