The idea for this book flashed into my mind in-between academic conferences, throughout my long hours of waiting for flights with my colleague, Dr. Ronen A. Cohen from Ariel University. Our conversations drifted to sceneries taken from different continents where various empires rose and fell; these discussions led, eventually, to this multidisciplinary project.

As time passed, others joined me and every one of them had his unique part in the success of this joint venture. I feel obliged to express my gratitude to each and to all of them.

To Dr. Etta Bick from Ariel University and Dr. Dan Naor from Bar Ilan University, who did not hesitate to join me when I called for help and together made up an excellent editorial board. Etta and Danny - I could not dream of a better team to lead this assignment.

To the authors of this book’s chapters, who trusted me all along and were willing to wait patiently when needed and to keep a tight schedule when urged to do so. To other authors, who did their best to enrich this book, but being bound to the double-blindfolded peer-review procedure I was required to reject their work.

To the IGI Global staff, who at all times gave me the good feeling that I was never alone in this endeavor.

In the early autumn of 1979, I was fortunate to meet Iris, the love of my life. Since then, our partnership has only built up. None of my achievements would become possible if it were not for her constant warm support and sensible inputs.
