The editors are pleased to acknowledge the assistance provided by the various individuals involved directly and indirectly in the culmination of this project.

First, the editors would like to thank the authors for their contribution and dedication to the field of education. Without their willingness to share in their experience and research, this book would not have become a reality. Your time and talent is greatly appreciated.

Second, the editors wish to acknowledge the valuable contributions of the reviewers that took part in the peer review process in order to ensure quality, coherence, and content presentation of each of the chapters. The level of detail given to each written word and each intended expression was phenomenal and the book would not be a reality without this level of professional dedication.

Especially, the editors would like to extend the warmest of appreciation and gratitude to the multitudes of friends and family who so graciously allowed the authors and reviewers time to dedicate to the important work of sharing information regarding how professionals can improve education.

Finally, without this group of individuals, the editors are beyond certain there would not be a need for this type of book. A special thanks to students everywhere who give of their time, talent, and treasure to pursue a dream to be better today than they were yesterday. To the tireless and persistent student who to no fault of his/her own is unable to complete their education in a timely manner, this collection of models and practices is for these students and it is the hope and dream of the editors that these students are able to complete a higher education credential in due time.

René Cintrón
Delgado Community College, USA

Jeanne C. Samuel
Delgado Community College, USA

Janice M. Hinson
University of North Carolina at Charlotte, USA