Table of Contents

Foreword ............................................................................................................................................. xvi

Preface .............................................................................................................................................. xviii

Acknowledgment ........................................................................................................................... xxv

Section 1
Blogging in the Writing Classroom

Chapter 1
Networked Digital Spaces: Twitter in the Composition Classroom .................................................. 1
Stephanie N. Phillips, University of South Florida, USA

Chapter 2
Blog Love: Blogging (And Microblogging) Communities as Writing Classroom Companions....... 14
Clarissa J. Walker, University of Rhode Island, USA

Chapter 3
Using Twitter to Scaffold English Composition ............................................................................. 32
Brian C. Harrell, The University of Akron, USA

Chapter 4
From Expository Blog to Engaged E-Portfolio: A Student-Centered Pedagogy in Process.......... 51
Jill Darling, University of Michigan, USA

Section 2
Exploring Multi-Digital Media in the Writing Classroom

Chapter 5
This Is the Remix: Remediating Pedagogy Practices ........................................................................ 74
Shannon Butts, University of Florida, USA
Chapter 6
Social Media and the Rhetorical Situation: Finding Common Ground Between Students’ Lives and Writing Courses ................................................................. 96
Katherine Fredlund, University of Memphis, USA

Chapter 7
Reblogging as Writing: The Role of Tumblr in the Writing Classroom ................................................. 116
Meghan McGuire, University of Delaware, USA

Section 3
Theorizing about Social Media Networks in the Writing Classroom

Chapter 8
Socializing Composition: Entering the Conversation of SNS in Composition ................................................. 133
Ken Hayes, Southwestern Oklahoma State University, USA

Chapter 9
Creating Meaning for Millennials: Bakhtin, Rosenblatt, and the Use of Social Media in the Composition Classroom ........................................................................... 151
Erin Trauth, University of South Florida, USA

Chapter 10
Slacktivism, Supervision, and #Selfies: Illuminating Social Media Composition through Reception Theory ........................................................................................................... 163
Elisabeth H. Buck, University of Massachusetts Dartmouth, USA

Chapter 11
The Blogging Method: Improving Traditional Student Writing Practices ................................................. 179
Christine Fiore, Independent Scholar, USA

Section 4
Integrating Social Media as Professional Development in the Writing Classroom

Chapter 12
Teaching Casual Writing for Professional Success with Twitter: Digital Small Talk and the New Textese ........................................................................................................................................ 200
Amy Rubens, Radford University, USA

Chapter 13
Curating the Public Self: Helping Students Present an Authentic, Professional Persona via LinkedIn .......................................................................................................................... 221
Erin Trauth, University of South Florida, USA
Chapter 14
#WordUp! : Student Responses to Social Media in the Technical Writing Classroom ...................... 231
Kendra N. Bryant, Florida A&M University, USA

Section 5
Re-Envisioning Wikis in the Writing Classroom

Chapter 15
Using Wikipedia to Teach Written Health Communication ......................................................... 247
Melissa Vosen Callens, North Dakota State University, USA

Chapter 16
Designing a Wiki-Based Course for Enhancing the Practice of Writing Skills in the 21st Century:
Moving from Theoretical Grounding into Practical Knowledge ................................................ 259
Ahmed Abdulateef Al Khateeb, King Faisal University, Saudi Arabia

Compilation of References ............................................................................................................. 280

About the Contributors ................................................................................................................ 300

Index ................................................................................................................................................ 303