We would like to acknowledge that this volume would not be possible without the contributions of many talented people. First and foremost, we thank each one of the authors for their high-quality chapters and their participation as double-blind peer reviewers, providing valuable feedback to fellow authors and contributing significantly to strengthening the book. Without their time, expertise, and commitment this book would not have become a reality. In addition, we wish to recognize the pioneering police psychologists upon whose shoulders we stand. We hope with this book we humbly take up the torch they lit and carry it a little further. Finally, we must thank the men and women of law enforcement, from whom we have learned so much, and for whom we strive to learn much more. The police psychologist—no longer the rare bird—knows all too well the extraordinary challenges faced by today’s police officers.

_Cary. L. Mitchell_
_Pepperdine University, USA_

_Edrick H. Dorian_
_Los Angeles Police Department, USA_