The editors would like to acknowledge the help of all the people involved in this project.

First, the editors would like to thank each one of the authors for their contributions. Our sincere gratitude goes to the chapter’s authors who contributed their time and expertise to this book.

Second, the editors wish to acknowledge the valuable contributions of the reviewers regarding the improvement of quality, coherence, and content presentation of chapters. Most of the authors also served as referees; we highly appreciate their double task. Without their support, this book would not have become a reality.

Dr. Brockmeier would like to explicitly thank Mr. Mark Neikirk, Director of the Scripps Howard Center for Community Engagement at Northern Kentucky University. Without his untiring support and innovative vision, service learning would not have the campus-wide support of faculty and staff at that University.

I (Dr. Crosby) would like to thank the faculty at West Chester University of Pennsylvania who are committed to service-learning, and who first introduced me to it in 2007. The idea for this book came from their influence and seeing their sincere dedication to the implementation of it in their teaching. I would also like to thank Michael Malone for his support, and my research assistant, Dan Headrick, for his assistance in helping to spotlight the work of the scholars in this collection who are committed to engaging in community. Soli Deo gloria.

Frederick Brockmeier
Northern Kentucky University, USA

Cathryn Read Crosby
Columbia University Teachers College, USA