Acknowledgment

No long-term project of this nature ever operates in isolation, and in that mindset, we would like to thank the many individuals that have contributed to this book. First, we would like to thank the editorial board for their guidance and sage advice throughout the process. We also would like to thank each contributor to this book. We have learned a great deal from your perspectives, and look forward to your contributions being shared with the readers of this text. This process would not have been possible without the help of each reviewer. Thank you for your time, effort and expertise in making this project a success, especially in addition to the many responsibilities that many of you have on your plate.

We want to send a special thanks to IGI Global, Janine Haughton, and Jan Travers for their support and direction through this undertaking. Although there were certainly challenging times, we appreciate their patience in helping us navigate the storm.

Lastly and most importantly, we would like to thank the authors of this book who have poured their academic expertise and energy into each and every one of the chapters that make up the book. Their diverse and creative views, alongside their professional approach to their research and writing, have ensured the book progressed through to the publication stage. They have been strongly supported by colleagues and managers at their institutions who encouraged them to share their ideas through their scholarly writing, and their patient friends and family members to cheered them all throughout the process.

Maria Northcote
Avondale College of Higher Education, Australia

Kevin Gosselin
Texas A&M University, USA