Acknowledgment

I feel overwhelmed with gratitude and indebtedness to the many people who made this handbook possible. Like most of life’s endeavors, this publication represents a shared effort, as well as an individual achievement.

Foremost, thank you to Luis Frenzel, whose guidance, dedication and unfailing belief in the importance of my work, provided me with a constant source of support. His insights and tenacity for never giving up until a job is done correctly, are testaments to his gift for mentoring. He helped me battle my way through endless days, countless books, and blurry screens. By sharing the ups and downs of my journey, he made me laugh or provided appropriately soothing noises in my times of angst.

This handbook benefited tremendously from Professor Paul Gathercoal who authored the Foreword. It was a pleasure and a great honor to work with someone who so generously shared his time, experience and vast knowledge.

I am grateful to the authors for their contributions in this crucial area of research and without whose contribution, interest and generosity, this volume could never have become a reality. During this year-long project, I connected with these scholars while developing the content, and feel privileged to have had the opportunity to collaborate with them. Their work goes beyond addressing cheating to teaching integrity and espousing the importance of lifelong learning. I hope that there will be many more collaborations among us in the future.

Gratitude goes to my former EIBT colleagues—Janine Pierce, Lisa Place, Mardi Szantyr and Sophia Allani—for never having anything but confidence in me.

Finally, an enormous ‘thank you’ to my family and friends for sharing my happiness when starting this project and following with encouragement when it seemed too difficult to complete. Your unconditional support, sense of humor, patience, optimism and advice is always appreciated and valued more than you could imagine.
