This book would not be possible without the leadership and vision of the Sanford School of Education at National University. Our dean and department chairs have set the expectation that educators should not work in silos and that innovation emerges when people have the opportunity to collaborate and share ideas without restrictions in a safe environment. Our school Deans, Drs. Judy Mantle and Donna Elder, have provided us with the opportunity to dream big and set innovative goals as teacher educators. Drs. Nedra Crow and Joan Sebastian have provided us with opportunities such as the development of this book to collaborate across teacher and special education departments. Through dialogue and shared efforts on each chapter, we are reminded that there is much work to be done not only in the Schools of Education at National University, but in Schools of Education across the nation.
