Acknowledgment

I’d like to thank my students through the years, who have constantly supported and challenged me to work smarter and harder. My supervisors have all encouraged intellectual adventurism and reaching beyond my then-current abilities—to good ends. Of special note are the following: Virgilio Enriquez, Connie Broughton, Guo Tao, Helen Perlo, Dr. Norma Goldstein, and Scott Finkeldei. My editors have also shaped my work through the years. I appreciate the support of John G. Fox, II, Carrie Janssen, Alan Chong Lau, Dr. Edward H. Perry, Dr. Michele L. Pilati, Paula Smith, and Nancy Hays. My faculty and administrator clients have introduced me to many worlds of knowledge and so many opportunities for learning and growth. Thanks to Tyler Heath, Rebecca Beistline, and all the others at IGI Global who made this book possible. Their responsiveness and support have made this a very adventuresome and pleasant process.

I have deep gratitude to the researchers and writers, whose works are cited here for a more holistic view, and I hope that I have accurately reflected their ideas. I am thankful to those who’ve contributed to this book directly: Brent A. Anders, Dr. Ramesh C. Sharma, Dr. Jason Caudill, Diana Marrs, Jason Maseberg-Tomlinson, Julia Morse, and Hattie Williams. Those who’ve worked long know how valuable it is to work with ethical people who have fine follow-through. Thanks also to Dr. Carol Stockdale, for her encouragement of risk-taking and change at a critical moment.

For R. Max.
