Acknowledgment

Producing this book has been quite a long process and there are many people to acknowledge and thank for their contributions, apart, of course, for the authors of the chapters.

The first step towards a book was the start of the network that later became GLIT – Gender, Learning and IT – and for that network we must thank the research programme LearnIT and its leaders, who gave a small sum of seed money. Thank you, Professors Ulf P Lundgren and Roger Säljö, respectively chair and scientific leader for the LearnIT programme, for acknowledging the need for a gender perspective in the area of Learning and IT. Then the network grew, and received generous funding through LearnIT, from its host and funder, the Swedish Knowledge Foundation, for continued network activities and associated research projects, the second important step. Thanks must go to Madeleine Caesar, who was at that time Chief Executive Officer of the Knowledge Foundation. Lund University gave a home to the network within its centre for research on learning in the activities and enterprises of higher education, Learning Lund, and we thank those who made possible the meetings in the sunny conference room there with its outlook over the Bishop’s House in Lund.

The network, now comprising a number of research projects, worked together for three years, meeting regularly to discuss the ongoing research, most of which is represented in this book. The culminating event was a conference held in Helsingborg, Sweden, where network members presented their work, and invited international researchers complemented our work with theirs. This marked a third step towards the book, for there a book was outlined with a new international presence, which was later strengthened through close contact with the European Athena network and its conferences. Thank you, all who attended the respective conferences and contributed to the discussions there.

The fourth step was engaging with IGI Global and the assigned editor Beth Ardner. Thank you, Beth, for your ever ready and helpful advice, offered professionally, concisely and cheerfully. And thank you for the opportunity to extend our boundaries to a wider international audience of gender and IT researchers.

Finally, the fifth step was to collect, collate, review, edit, administer, and archive the material we received, with the invaluable help of our panel of expert reviewers. Having come this long, we think that an acknowledgement to one another as editors would not be out of place, for good collaboration.
