Acknowledgment

The writing of a book, for sure, starts with a creative sparkle, but its development depends on a disciplined and intense effort. This is particularly true when writing an edited book which requires the coordination and integration of different research ideas to share the same focus. This book has been inspired by the research that I have been carrying out in the last decade and by the energising and engaging conversations that I had the pleasure to share with many colleagues and friends. So, first, I would like to acknowledge all the people at Università degli Studi della Basilicata, at the Politecnico di Bari, at the Centre for Business Performance, Cranfield School of Management, at the Intellectual Asset Centre in Glasgow, and more recently at the Institute for Manufacturing, University of Cambridge, who have animated the curiosity and love for my research. I am grateful to the colleagues who have shared with me the passion for writing this book by contributing with their chapters. Without their diligent work this book would not have been produced. The development of this book has been supported by the Editorial Advisory Board members and by the important work of reviewers. I would like to thank them for their invaluable contribution.

A special thanks to the staff of IGI Global. Their professionalism and excellent support have been fundamental for the development of the editorial project. I especially thank Joel Gamon who has helped me in the different stages of the development of this book and Hannah Abelbeck who took care of the pre-production process.

My deepest thanks to the people who walk my path with me. My life would not be so rich and interesting without them. Finally I would like to acknowledge the Italian Minister of University and Scientific Research for financing my research, which is part of the National Scientific Research Programs (PRIN 2007).
