I appreciate the time, support, and professional experiences of all those who helped make this book a reality. Foremost, I thank all of the authors for their creative perspectives, hard work, diligence, and their dedication to their profession and to the advancement of globalized e-learning. In addition to writing chapters, many of them also donated their valuable time as peer reviewers: Nektaria Palaiologou, Katherine Watson, Steve McCarty, Datta Kaur Khalsa, Youmei Liu, Marcus Childress, Jane Eberle, Patrick Dunn, Martin Schell, Wanjira Kinuthia, Meng-Fen (Grace) Lin, Mimi Miyoung Lee, David Catterick, Bolanle Olaniran, Rita Zaltsman, and Chun-Min Wang. In particular, Ruth Gannon Cook and Caroline Crawford went beyond the call of duty with their assistance, especially when they sensed any note of desperation in my voice!

Several professional colleagues and friends also offered their time voluntarily as external reviewers of the book chapters, often responding to my request for a fast turnaround: Pier Junor-Clarke (Georgia State University, USA), Sanjaya Mishra (Indira Gandhi National Open University, India), Gert Jan Hofstede (Wageningen University, The Netherlands), Curtis Bonk (Indiana University, USA), Vivian Wright (University of Alabama, USA), Victor Quiros (Our Family Services, USA), Xu Di (Walden University, USA), Linda Crawford (Walden University, USA), Gaye Bumsted-Perry (Maricopa Community College, USA), and John Petroff (Professional Education Organization International, USA). In addition, I would like to thank Gert Jan Hofstede for writing the book’s foreword. He is frank, funny, and foremost, a professional!

Thanks to my development editor, Kristin Roth, for providing timely information and feedback, and for commiserating with me when I got “whiny.”

I also thank my friends and family for their unflagging support and encouragement. In particular, thanks to the Lunch Bunch, Annette Carapellucci, Marie Wesselhoft, and Valerie Grindle, for our monthly “encouragement” sessions! And, lastly, I am especially appreciative of my husband, Victor, who supports and encourages my passions unquestioningly.
