I am most grateful to Dean Spencer, Associate Dean Sellmann, Acting Associate Dean Somera and the Administrative Affairs Council of the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences at the University of Guam for a research grant to complete this book, as well as a reduced teaching load. I thank them for fostering a community of assessment and for helping me create opportunities since I arrived on Guam in 2004.

I am indebted in numerous ways to my research assistant, Nick Illich, an English M.A. student at the University of Guam, whose adeptness with web-related matters was of utmost importance to this project.

The members of the Editorial Advisory Board are listed elsewhere, but must be thanked individually for reviewing many manuscripts and offering editorial advice: Michel Pharand, James Sellman, Mya Poe, David Gugin, Jason Vest, John Wittman, Asao Inoue, and Robert Kellerman. The individual reviewers who helped out are numerous and, in many cases, contributors to this book. They are listed on the Reviewers page. Their personal investment made sure quality was kept high.

Also immensely helpful were some local colleagues, well versed in assessment theory and practice and/or common sense. They include Mary Spencer, Beth Somera, Chris Garcia, Sharleen Santos Bamba, Troy McVey, Henry Taijeron, and Grazyna Badowski.

Thanks as always to Deb Respicio for being helpful with the office copying machine and related matters on days when everyone else is home on holiday as they should be.

Special thanks go to Daniel Chambliss, of Hamilton College, who upon my invitation contributed his essay, and Charles F. Blaich, Director of Inquiries at the Center of Inquiry in the Liberal Arts, Wabash College, who gave us permission to reprint it. The essay by Dr. Chambliss was originally published in LiberalArtsOnline, an electronic publication of the Center of Inquiry in the Liberal Arts at Wabash College.

Likewise special thanks to Bob Broad, who graciously accepted my invitation to write the Foreword. Lisa Stern, of Westmont College, offered valuable input as well.

Finally, I would like to express my gratitude to Julia Mosemann and my editors at IGI Global, who have done so much to facilitate final production of the manuscript.

Christopher Schreiner, University of Guam, Guam