Acknowledgment

This book was possible because I had the opportunity to collaborate with three different scientific communities: Philosophers in Warsaw, where Professor Dr. Janusz Kuczynski, founder and honorary president of the International Society for Universalism (ISU—today, for Universal Dialogue, ISUD) gave me many lessons in philosophy; informaticians at Western Michigan University (WMU), where I work and collaborate with very good IT professionals such as Professors Kuriakos Athappilly, Kauchian Chen, Pairin Katerattanakul, Anne Mary Oulai, Muhammad Razi, Allen Rea, Thomas Rienzo, and Thomas Zemrowski; and civilizationists from the International Society for the Comparative Study of Civilizations, among them Professors Matthew Melko, David Wilkinson, Walter Benesch, John Hord, Donald Burgy, Laina Farhat-Holzman, Joseph Drew, Michael Andregg, Ricardo Duchesne, Dario Fernandez-Morera, Steve Blaha, and others with whom I meet to learn about civilization every year at international conferences. Particularly, I am also grateful to Professor Dr. Michael Pritchard, a philosopher from WMU who has given me some hints about wisdom in his circle. However, I am most grateful to my Professors Seweryn Chajtman and Zbigniew Gackowski from Warsaw Polytechnic who taught me how to think and look for the centrality of a problem.

I am grateful to Prof. Dr. David Schields, Prof. Dr. Ajay Samant, Prof. Dr. Kay M. Palan consecutive Deans of the WMU Haworth College of Business (HCoB) and consecutive chairs of the WMU-HCoB Business Information Systems Department, Prof. Dr. Bernard Hun and Prof. Dr. Mike Tarn, who gave me the time to pursue my research. Also, I would very much like to thank my daughter-in-law Sophia Rath-Targowski, ABD (psychologist) and Kit Almy for looking through and commenting on my manuscript, limiting its errors, and making it more understandable. Needless to say, the biggest stimulus for writing this book came from my dear wife Dr. Irmina Targowski, whose medical wisdom overwhelms me, as does my son John’s legal wisdom. Both of them have contributed to my sanity.

Andrew Targowski
Western Michigan University, USA