Acknowledgment

During the year-long development process, I was provided with ongoing support by the IGI Global staff. I appreciate Hannah Abelbeck, Editorial Assistant, Development Division of IGI Global, who assisted me in organizing ideas, identifying contributing authors, reviewing contributions, and publishing throughout each step of the development process.

I am indebted to all the chapter proposal and full chapter contributors. Without their excellent contributions, this book would be castles in the air. I got to know them through multiple rounds of emails, the most traditional, simple, but efficient interaction approach in the age of ICT.

I am grateful to all the invited chapter reviewers, some of whom are either contributors to this book or Editorial Advisory Board members. Without their critiques and constructive comments and suggestions, the double blinded review could not be realized in a timely manner.

Special thanks should also be given to the Editorial Advisory Board members, such as Professor Kinshuk and Professor Sampson. Their professional suggestions and comments on this book project encouraged and inspired me throughout the hard development process.

Last but not least, I give my heartfelt appreciation to Professor Childress for taking precious time out of his busy work schedule to write an inspiring foreword.

Publishing a scholarly, edited book is an extensive international collaboration among the publisher, editor, contributing authors, and reviewers, as I have experienced in the past year. This unforgettable collaboration enriches my professional and academic life much. If the ultimate goal can be achieved to produce a high-quality publication that will make its mark in its field, every Editorial Advisory Board member, every contributing author, every reviewer, the foreword author, and the publisher, IGI Global, all are cordially appreciated!
