Information Technology Management in Developing Countries

Table of Contents

Foreword ................................................................................................................................. vii
Mohammad Dadashzadeh
Wichita State University, USA

Preface .................................................................................................................................... ix

Chapter 1. IT Industry Success in Small Countries: The Cases of Finland and New Zealand ............................................................................................................. 1
Rebecca Watson, PA Consulting Group, Australia
Michael D. Myers, University of Auckland, New Zealand

Chapter 2. Can National Information Infrastructures Enhance Social Development in the Least Developed Countries? An Empirical Investigation ......................................................... 23
Peter Meso and Nancy Duncan
Kent State University, USA

Chapter 3. Information Technology for Relational Business Ecosystems: A Case Study in the Brazilian Engineering Industry ......................................................... 52
Luiz Antonio Joia, Rio de Janeiro State University, Brazil

Chapter 4. Geographic Information Systems in Developing Countries: Issues in Data Collection, Implementation and Management ........................................... 70
Brian E. Mennecke, Iowa State University, USA
Lawrence A. West, Jr., University of Central Florida, USA

Chapter 5. Transfer of Information Technology to the Arab World: A Test of Cultural Influence Modeling ................................................................. 92
Detmar W. Straub, Karen D. Loch and Carole E. Hill
Georgia State University, USA
Petter Gottschalk, Norwegian School of Management, Norway

Chapter 7. Out of Scandinavia – Facing Social Risks in IT Development in South Africa .................................................................157
Helana Scheepers, University of Pretoria, South Africa
Lars Mathiassen, Aalborg University, Denmark

Chapter 8. Dysfunctional Development Pathways of Information and Communication Technology: Cultural Conflicts ................186
G. Roland Kaye and Stephen Little
Open University Business School

Chapter 9. The Context of Introducing IT/IS-Based Innovation into Local Government in Colombia .............................................204
Mahmoud M. Watad, Fairleigh Dickinson University, USA

Chapter 10. Leapfrogging an IT Labor Force: Multinational and Indigenous Perspectives .................................................................221
Eileen M. Trauth, Northeastern University, USA

Chapter 11. Enterprise Intelligence: A New Concept of Management For the New Economy .............................................................244
Marcos Cavalcanti, Federal University of Rio de Janeiro UFRJ, Brazil
Elisabeth Gomes, National Nuclear Energy Commission

Chapter 12. Assessing the Software Industry in Egypt .............................258
Sherif Kamel, American University in Cairo, Egypt

Chapter 13. A Model of a Computer Salary Calculation System in Poland ..........................................................................................270
Wojciech Jurkowski, University of Szczecin, Poland

Chapter 14. Sticking to the Basics: Information Technology at the Glue Factory ............................................................................276
Charlene A. Dykman and Charles K. Davis
University of St. Thomas, USA

Chapter 15. Information Technology for Knowledge Management in China ......................................................................................294
Michelle W. L. Fong, Victoria University of Technology, Australia
Chapter 16. Developing an Expert System to Software Selection in Small Business .................................................................304
Leopoldo Colmenares, University Simon Bolivar

Chapter 17. Software Development in Developing Countries: Framework for Analysis of Quality Initiatives ..........................................................309
Syed Zahoor Hassan, Lahore University of Management Sciences, Pakistan

Chapter 18. Requirements of IS Development Methodologies Towards the New Organizational Paradigm – A Brasilian Study Using Delphi Technique ........................................................................................................319
Aline Franca de Abreu, Federal University of Santa Catarina, Brazil
Ruth Ferreira Roque Rossi, Itajai Valley University, Brazil

About the Editor .............................................................................................330

Index.................................................................................................................331