Preface ............................................................................................................................................... vii

Section I: Professional Practice

Chapter I
Instructional Designers’ Perceptions of Their Agency: Tales of Change and Community
Richard A. Schwier, University of Saskatchewan, Canada
Katy Campbell, University of Alberta, Canada
Richard F. Kenny, Athabasca University, Canada

Chapter II
Exploring the Tensions in Educational and Instructional Design in Australian Universities
Jenny Bird, Southern Cross University, Australia
Chris Morgan, Southern Cross University, Australia
Meg O’Reilly, Southern Cross University, Australia

Chapter III
Strategies and Heuristics for Novice Instructional Designers as They Work with Faculty Content Experts in a University Setting
Min Liu, University of Texas at Austin, USA
Coco Kishi, University of Texas at Austin, USA
Suzanne Rhodes, University of Texas at Austin, USA
Chapter IV
Instructional Designers on the Borderline: Brokering Across Communities of Practice ................................................................. 68
   Michael J. Keppell, Hong Kong Institute of Education, Hong Kong

Section II: Cross-Cultural Context

Chapter V
A Great Wall of Difference: Musings on Instructional Design in Contemporary China ................................................................. 91
   Susan Crichton, University of Calgary, Canada

Chapter VI
An Emerging Model of Community Collaboration During the Construction of E-Learning Resources: Implications for Papua-New Guinea .................................................. 106
   Lalen Simeon, Pacific Adventist University, Papua New Guinea
   Gwyn Brickell, University of Wollongong, Australia
   Brian Ferry, University of Wollongong, Australia

Chapter VII
Instructional Design, Development, and Context Expertise: A Model for “Cross Cultural” Collaboration ........................................... 127
   Cathy Gunn, University of Auckland, New Zealand
   Beth Cavallari, University of Queensland, Australia

Section III: University-Wide Context

Chapter VIII
Educational Design at Southern Cross University Australia: A Case Study .... 153
   Chris Morgan, Southern Cross University, Australia
   Jenny Bird, Southern Cross University, Australia
   Meg O’Reilly, Southern Cross University, Australia

Chapter IX
The Changing Role of an Instructional Designer in the Implementation of Blended Learning at an Australian University ........................................... 170
   Jacqueline McDonald, University of Southern Queensland, Australia
   Terry Mayes, Glasgow Caledonian University, Scotland

Chapter X
Delivering Online Expertise, Online ................................................................. 193
   Stephen Quinton, Curtin University of Technology, Australia
Chapter XI
Bridging Instructional Designers and Lecturers in Technology Education:
A Framework for Cultivating a Community of Practice.................................215
   Samuel Ng Hong Kok, Institute of Technical Education, Singapore
   Tang Buay Choo, Institute of Technical Education, Singapore
   Myint Swe Khine, Murdoch University, Australia

Chapter XII
Designer Communities: Developing a Knowledge Base of Strategies, Tools and Experience......................................................................................................238
   Sarah Lambert, University of Wollongong, Australia
   Christine Brown, University of Wollongong, Australia

Section IV: Faculty and Departmental Context

Chapter XIII
Terms of Engagement: A Case Study of Instructional Designers in a Faculty of Law..................................................................................................................257
   Len Webster, Monash University, Australia
   Patricie Mertova, Monash University, Australia

Chapter XIV
Introducing E-Learning in a Traditional Chinese Context............................275
   Pamela Pui Wan Leung, Hong Kong Institute of Education, Hong Kong

Chapter XV
Exploring the Nardoo: Designing Problem-Based Learning Experiences
for Secondary School Students .............................................................................296
   Sue Bennett, University of Wollongong, Australia

Chapter XVI
Multi-Disciplinary Collaboration to Unravel Expert Knowledge:
Designing for Effective Human-Computer Interaction....................................309
   Elspeth McKay, RMIT University, Australia
   Jennifer Martin, RMIT University, Australia

Section V: School Context

Chapter XVII
ActiveHealth: Enhancing the Community of Physical and Health Educators
Through Online Technologies..............................................................................331
   Lori Lockyer, University of Wollongong, Australia
   John Patterson, University of Wollongong, Australia
   Gregg Rowland, University of Wollongong, Australia
   Doug Hearne, University of Wollongong, Australia
Chapter XVIII
Creating CoPs During the Development of an Online Classroom-Based Simulation..................................................................................................................349

Brian Ferry, University of Wollongong, Australia
Lisa Kervin, University of Wollongong, Australia

Chapter XIX
Moving Toward a Digital Learning Environment: A Hong Kong Example of an E-Learning Management System.................................................................369

Kar-Tin Lee, Queensland University of Technology, Australia

About the Authors........................................................................................................397

Index...........................................................................................................................405