Acknowledgment

There are several people that I would like to thank and acknowledge who were involved in this book project. Several people made this book come to life. To begin, I would like to thank all of the dedicated authors and contributors to this book. The contributors are forward-thinking, insightful, and committed thought leaders in the area of virtual work research. I enjoyed working with each of the authors throughout the book process, and I deeply appreciate their commitment to expand the boundaries of virtual work.

Many thanks to my exceptional editorial board: Dr. Brenda J. Allen, University of Denver; Dr. Tyler Harrison, Purdue University; Dr. Stacey Connaughton, Purdue University; Dr. Anita Blanchard, The University of North Carolina at Charlotte; and Dr. Gaelle Picherit-Duthler, Zehid University, UAE. Their expert guidance and advice were invaluable as I was shaping this book project.

I would like to thank the numerous reviewers who blind reviewed each of the chapters and offered insightful and instructive feedback to the contributors and me. Special thanks to my research team—Sayde Brais, Frances Walton, Jamon Flowers, and Ryan Arakaki.

The support of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, Department of Communication Studies, and the Organizational Science Program at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte has been invaluable in completing this project. The vibrant intellectual and interdisciplinary culture at UNC Charlotte makes working on projects like this one a real pleasure.

Thanks to the great team at IGI Global. Special thanks to Hannah Abelbeck, Editorial Assistant, for her expert guidance and support on this book.

Finally, and most importantly, I wish to thank my terrific family and friends, near and far, for their ongoing and tireless support of me in all of my endeavors, especially providing a constructive ear and sounding board on this project.

Shawn D. Long

University of North Carolina – Charlotte, USA