Acknowledgment

My consolation for running what seemed as endless errands for my parents was that when I am their age, I would have others run errands for me and thus will be less busy than I saw them in my little eyes. My dream is yet to come true and is quite the opposite as I see myself much busier as I grow up. Thus, when IGI approached me to put this book together, I am happy that I appointed three co-editors – Grzegorz Majewski, Professor Princely Ifinedo and Iwara Arikpo. I am very grateful for the hard work they have put not only to contribute articles, but also to help coordinate the rest of the authors. Without their efforts, this book would not be at this quality and completed now. I am very grateful to them.

I am also very grateful to each of the authors for persisting to the end. Some dropped out by the roadway and some were unfortunately dropped at the beginning after reading their proposals. For 15 chapters with joint authorship for most of them, I cannot list the names of the authors but I do acknowledge their work and help in the review process. Others who participated in the review process are members of the editorial advisory board (EAB). They participated in the review process and their useful feedback helped the authors to improve the quality of their work. For their help, am particularly grateful to Professor Malcolm Crowe and Dr Mark Stansfield of University of the West of Scotland, Dr Rosemary Burnley of University of Bedford, Dr Christina Koutra of Bournemouth University, Professor Matthew Kuofie of Central Central Michigan University and Dr Vincent Ribiere of Bangkok University. May I also express my gratitude to our Foreword Author – Professor Ray Hackney of Brunel University.

I must mention the University of Calabar for happily hosting the Conference on Information Technology and Economic Development (CITED) which attracted the IGI publishers to invite me to do this book. I am particularly grateful to the then Vice-Chancellor Professor Bassey Asuquo and the LoC (Local Organising Committee) that he appointed for the conference. I am grateful to Professor Lipcey (the Chair of the Committee) and other members of the Committee. My visits to University of Calabar as well as Bangkok University have been generously sponsored by the Royal Society, the Royal Society of Edinburgh (different from the first one) and Carnegie Trust. I am very grateful for their support which resulted in the collaborations which is at the foundation of this book’s concept. I also want to be grateful to one of the Directors of the Bangkok University research centre, Dr Lugkana Worasinchhai, for receiving both my student and myself on the research visit. My University including my School of Computing and its Head, Professor Christos Grecos are to be appreciated for the support for CITED. I should also appreciate Alison Anderson (and her boss and the Head of Corporate Marketing, Marcus Ross) for accompanying me to represent the University of the West of Scotland at the first CITED and signing on behalf of the University the communiqué to be repeating the conference.
I cannot also fail to mention the team of well-wishers both in UK and outside who did so well to keep my sanity long enough to complete this task. Among them are (and the list is not in the order of importance) my PhD research students, Leonard Bloom, Mrs Evelyn Fitzpatrick, Johnson Opigo, Ezendu Ariwa of London Metropolitan University, Dr Rosemary Galli in Oxford, my brothers and their wives – Paul Usoro SAN (Senior Advocate of Nigeria), Mrs Mfon Usoro, Dr Nathaniel Usoro and Dr Chinyere Usoro. My daughter’s Emem Usoro persistence to complete her medical studies next year also inspired and drove me on to the completion of this book.

I should not forget to mention Myla Harty and IGI Global for giving the opportunity to do what I have not done before and I hope there will be a better repeat performance.
