Acknowledgment

From Government to E-Governance: Public Administration in the Digital Age is the outcome of close collaboration and the patience of everyone involved in the publication project. For several reasons it took more than the usual time to finish the project, and we thank everyone—the authors, reviewers, publisher, and advisory board members—for being with us over the last several months. We would like to acknowledge our gratitude to all the authors, thirty-six in total, from all over the world, for their time, energy, and productive contributions to this volume. We express our sincere appreciation to the authors who have also reviewed a few of the chapters in the volume. Without your contribution, this project would not have been completed even at this time. At this point, we would also like to remember the assistance and encouragement we received from Matti Malkia of the Police College of Finland and Jiri Vanicek of the Czech University of Life Science, who passed away last year. Both of them were very enthusiastic about this publication project.

The editorial advisory board members, from time to time, have advised us on the project. They have always been available when we needed their advice, and we are indeed grateful for that. Their association with this book project has been an encouraging incentive and learning experience for us. We are grateful to Professor Paul Brown, as well, for his advice on various aspects of the publication process. The staff at IGI Global have always been very helpful with their professional suggestions and assistance in completing this project. Especially, we would like to mention the hard work and patience of Christine E. Smith, who has been with us in the final phase of the publication. Without you, Christine, and your colleagues’ contributions, the publication would not have been possible. Finally, we would like to appreciate the direct and indirect assistance that we received from our host institutions, i.e., the University of Dhaka and Jahangirnagar University, both situated in Bangladesh.

Last but not the least, we would like to thank our family members for giving us the time and space needed for completing such a publication project. We are thankful, respectively, to our wives, Farzana and Naveen. Our kids, Abrar, Raafi, and Wasil, provided us with the much needed fun break from this and other academic responsibilities. We thank you all for that!

Finally, for innumerable reasons, we dedicate this work, respectively, to the memories of Peter Aucoin, who was a wonderful human being and a great scholar and renowned teacher of political science and public administration at Dalhousie University, as well as to Professor Gregory B. Lewis of Georgia State University’s Andrew Young School of Policy Studies for being a great mentor.
