Acknowledgment

At its inception, this book was derived out of a gap in the literature on diversity leadership, particularly how technology brings us together to be more inclusive in leadership. We knew that we would have to solicit a special group of professionals who were practicing diversity leadership. This group is few and far between; however, an outstanding group of authors were eager to write about how they exemplify diversity leadership in different contexts.

We would like to express our sincere gratitude to the chapter authors for their contribution to this book and for sharing their perspectives on diversity leadership. Without their variety of experiences and depth of knowledge, we would not have reached our goal to span several sectors of society and to provide examples and practical solutions. We would also like to thank the editorial board and reviewers. These talented experts and practitioners gave their valuable time and effort to make this book a success, and for that we are extremely grateful. We would like to thank all the diversity leadership professionals, from outside consultants to leaders within, who facilitate the development of diversity leadership organizations. Lastly, we would like to thank our families, especially Bevley Green, Melinda Surry, Robert F. Lewis Sr., and Paulette Lewis. With the contributions of our colleagues, collaboration with other professionals, and support of our families, this edited book further expands the literature on the discipline of diversity leadership.

Joél P. Lewis
University of South Alabama, USA

André M. Green
University of South Alabama, USA

Daniel W. Surry
University of South Alabama, USA