Acknowledgment

This book is produced and published with a great deal of help from a lot of people, including colleagues and institutions. It is a tough exercise for me to cite all those that are related to this production process. I will try to mention those that I can easily recognize as unforgettable contributors.

My wife, Fatima, and my sons, Amine, Ouassim, and Tarik, are directly recognized for their inputs to this book through allowing me to pursue the task of research and writing while providing me with the best material and immaterial conditions for my comfort and creativity. Their continuous encouragements and love are major inputs in this modest realization.

I want also to acknowledge the continuous support of the President of Al Akhawayn University, Professor Driss Ouaouicha, and the Vice-President for Academic Affairs, Professor Ahmed Legrouiri. They have had supportive functions through their recognition of the outputs produced by the Institute of Economic Analysis and Prospective Studies (IEAPS). The continuous encouragements of these officers are recognized as major sources of inspiration and energy to the author and editor of the current book.

My deep thanks go also to the Foundation of the Mediterranean Institutes of Economic Sciences (FEMISE) for the continuous support provided and for the efforts of promoting economic research and applications in the Mediterranean region.

I recognize and appreciate the opportunity and confidence placed in me and in my laboratory to conduct the realization of this book. Special thanks are addressed to Professor Jean Louis Reiffers, who played a key role in conceiving and ensuring the scientific instruments and guidance of FEMISE. Professor Reiffers could not be acknowledged without referring to Dr. Frederic Blanc and Dr. Maryse Louis who have carried the academic, administrative, and financial load of FEMISE. Besides those, there are the members of the FEMISE scientific committee, who need to be congratulated for their wonderful accomplishments. My gratitude goes also to Professor Ahmed Galal, who has been instrumental in the promotion of the FEMISE and Economic Research Forum (ERF) networks in the Mediterranean and MENA region.

My deep acknowledgments go to IGI, who encouraged me to pursue this project under the continuous help and monitoring of Ms. Hannah Abelbeck and Mr. Austin DeMarco, respectively.

This work could not be achieved without the input from my colleagues and FEMISE collaborators to the research project FEM-32-01. I can cite here the example of Ms. Nada Zouag from the IEAPS, Professors Cristina Boboc from the University of Bucharest, and Ahmad Bajjou from Al Akhawayn University, Ifrane, Morocco, Professor Lahcen Oulhaj and Professor Mouna Cherkaoui from Mohammed V University, Rabat, Morocco. I also recognize that the contributions of Ms. Nada Zouag have continued beyond FEM-32-01, as her production process has also covered segments of the current book.

It is important to note at this stage the help of Mrs. Amale Achehboune with the editing and organization of different chapters and other editorial matters required under the standards of IGI. Her contributions to this book but also to the IEAPS are highly identified and recognized. The assistantships of Ms. Ghita Bentouila, Ms. Hajar Bousfiha, and of Mr. Youssef Chetioui are also well identified and acknowledged. Major inputs related to youth, poverty, and women are developed by Mr. Youssef Chetioui.

The contributions of different reviewers, including those selected by IGI for analyzing the full manuscript and those I selected for individual chapters, are highly appreciated. These include, besides the anonymous referees, Professors Daniel Sauers, Antonio Rodriguez, Karim Moustaghfir, and Andrew Canterbury, with the contribution of Dr. Khalid Mrabet. Inputs from Amine Driouchi, Noureddine Labied, Khadija Iraqi, and Nesrine Ouriaghli are also highly recognized. All these contributors are acknowledged here for their wonderful accomplishments, especially the input provided by Ms. Nesrine Ouriaghli in ensuring the APA style in the overall book.

I would like to thank each one of the above contributors for their confidence and for their generous input. All the mistakes and inconsistencies introduced while working on this book and ensuring the final output are my responsibility as the author and the editor.

Finally, special thanks are addressed to those individuals, groups, and institutions that will identify and use this book. In this set, I recognize the FEMISE network that has been over time generating a climate of scholarship and devotion to theoretical and applied questions that concern the Mediterranean area. I also identify ERF, which pursues complementary objectives and tasks. I identify the universities in the Mediterranean region and outside it, where students and faculty are, on daily basis, struggling for pushing further the frontier of knowledge. I also identify international organizations that are devoting efforts to promote research and development in different areas with a focus on human development, health, education, and socio-economic conditions. The organizations related to the United Nations in areas of food and agriculture, health, education, commerce, and development are seen as major and potential users of this book. Other organizations, such as the World Bank, the IMF, and others, besides nongovernmental institutions, are also acknowledged. They are all cited as important providers of knowledge for development but also acknowledged in advance for identifying and using this book.

Ahmed Driouchi
Al Akhawayn University, Morocco