Acknowledgment

Doing this project was a great learning experience. We learnt constantly from the global experts involved in international collaborations in the LIS arena. Mention must be made of the time and advice received from Prof. Neelameghan and Prof. Daniel Dorner. Despite his busy schedule, Prof. Neelameghan has also provided an epilogue for this book. We also express appreciation for the work put in by the Editorial Advisory Board comprised of celebrated LIS scholars from all over the globe.

We express our gratitude to their respective families for their loving endurance and whole-hearted support without which this project could not have seen the light of the day. The publisher, IGI-Global, and, especially, Myla have been tremendous help, much more than their call for duty.

This book tries to collocate the world experiences on collaborative librarianship from the global leaders of the field. It also presents different country scenarios in aid of comparisons. This may help in benchmarking good practices taking lessons from the relevant case study and may inspire replication of the cases appropriate to the readers’ work arena. The success of the book will depend upon how much we are using the experiences of the global leaders to improvise solutions for our own cases. In this age of “One Small World,” where we are all citizens, this book is another small step towards removing knowledge barriers and opening up to everyone who is willing.

Susmita Chakraborty
University of Calcutta, India

Anup Kumar Das
Jawaharlal Nehru University, India