These are exciting times for enterprise architecture and enterprise architects. The discipline is on a cusp of change, and this is being reflected in the way old (traditional) mental models are being challenged and reshaped. I have had the privilege of interacting with some of the finest in the business and polishing my thinking and skills, which in some ways led me to conceive this book in the first place. In certain ways, I used the social media channels to propose new ideas, to which I received feedback and criticism. The realization that a book like this is necessary and will make the required impact and contribution to current literature came about when a discussion I posted on LinkedIn went viral. That said, the book had to be a team effort, and my intent was to bring top academics, serious practitioners, and inspirational creators into this single platform as a coherent team.

First, I would like to thank IGI Global for (again) giving me the opportunity to continue my wonderful collaboration with them. This is my fourth book with them, and it has been a great partnership so far.

Secondly, I would like to thank all the contributing chapter authors. Their contributions have been invaluable. They are all well experienced and respected experts representing both academia and practice.

Last but not the least, the contribution of the Editorial Advisory Board (EAB) cannot be overstated. These are globally recognized experts who took time off their busy schedules to review chapters, provide constructive feedback, and improve the overall quality of chapters. The EAB played a crucial role in enhancing the quality of the book. Interacting with them over the years has enriched my understanding in many ways.

The authors and the members of the EAB had to deal with my often-aggressive deadlines and nagging reminders. They have been wonderful partners in this journey with an outstanding spirit of cooperation and a shared vision of success of this book.

This book would not have become a reality without the blessings of my mother, Shrimati Anima Saha, and my father, Late Shri Jagatbandhu Saha. I thank Neeta, my wife, for her love, support, and patience while this was being written. A special word of love goes to our most adorable daughter, Anushka. Neeta and I were blessed with Anushka when I started working on my first book, and with this fifth book, she is now in Primary 2.
