Acknowledgment

My special thanks to David Rosen, not only for his Foreword, but also for his encouragement when I was deciding whether to write this book. He suggested that my idea of going back to a time when humans did not think of themselves as in control of nature and then looking at what happened later was not crazy. Jane Whitehill deserves special mention for her careful and thorough reading of Chapters 1-4. Her comments resulted in some major improvements to those chapters. Daniel Quinn and Sarah Mallery supplied helpful comments and criticism. My daughter Katie Schultz supplied some valuable firsthand information about leaving a vegetarian diet. Neil Anapol introduced me to Heidegger’s writings on technology many years ago. Mike Gladders and Dorian Abbot of the University of Chicago Astronomy Department provided help with the intricacies of “runaway greenhouse,” as did Mike Guidry of the University of Tennessee Astronomy and Physics Department. Finally, Monica Speca and Joel Gamon of the IGI Global editorial staff provided prompt and clear answers to all my questions. Also my thanks to John Dittmeier, Andrew Ross, Rebecca Schultz, and the Woodbury University Library Staff.
