Acknowledgment

I would like to acknowledge the help of everyone who supported me during the development of this book. I would first like to thank my PhD supervisors, Dr. Anne Curry and Dr. José da Costa, at the University of Alberta for allowing me to divide my attentions between my dissertation and this project. I hope my efforts have paid off not only for this book but also for my dissertation. Special mention needs to be made to the many professors I have taken courses with over the past few years. They have both encouraged me in my work and pushed me to go further in my thinking. Of particular note is Dr. Lisa Given at Charles Sturt University in Australia. Not only did she encourage me to pursue this opportunity but she has also challenged my thinking in regards to all aspects of my work. My professional and doctoral colleagues also deserve special mention, particularly Sarah Polkinghorne, Caroline Whippey, and Cameron Hoffman. Over coffee and email, they have provided insights and suggestions that I would otherwise have overlooked.

Special thanks go to the publishing team at IGI Global. Their support has been invaluable. I would like to thank Mirela Roncevic for first thinking that I could tackle this project; without her encouragement, I might not have pursued it and Christine Smith for helping me bring this book to completion. However, Joel A. Gamon deserves the most thanks. His enthusiasm, patience, and support motivated me to keep writing! I would also like to thank the anonymous reviewers for their suggestions on making this book stronger.

Lastly, I would like to thank my partner, Paul Bacon. Without his keen eye and loving support this book would not have been completed.
