Acknowledgment

The editors would like to thank the following people: The ever-encouraging and inspirational Dr. Elizabeth Losh at The University of California, San Diego, for her support of this project. To know that the person who knows more about digital rhetoric than anyone is supportive of what you do was an encouragement and inspiration throughout this project for both of us as scholars. Next to her busy publication, conference, and research schedule, Dr. Losh was kind enough to write a foreword for this book and no doubt will be influencing and producing more on the topic. We look forward to her groundbreaking work in this area and are humbled by her kind words about this project. We would also like to thank Dr. Kirk St. Amant at East Carolina University for supporting our project and providing us with practical tips on how to deal with the editing process of this book and for always being a resource of knowledge and wisdom. We also would like to thank Dr. Barry Thatcher at New Mexico State University and Dr. Jeffrey Grabill and Dr. Bill-Hart Davidson at Michigan State University for agreeing to be a part of our editorial advisory board. We appreciate your support.

We would like to thank the various contributors for their hard work and courage in writing in this exciting research area, and for always responding in kind to our queries and demands on their no doubt busy schedules. You created this book with us, and without you, it would not exist. We are excited to have been part of your scholarly journeys, and to have so many different types of scholars enthused about our book topic was exciting. We are excited to see so many new perspectives and new roads travelled in this particularly understudied and hard-to-define scholarly area. Finally, we would like to thank our publisher, IGI Global, who helped us go through the process and were there for us during every step of the process, and all of our colleagues at the University of Texas at El Paso and Michigan State University.

Namaste.
