Preface

Acknowledgment

Section I:
Introduction

Chapter I
Bush Administration Information Policy and Democratic Values
G. David Garson, North Carolina State University, USA

Section II:
Freedom of Information and Access

Chapter II
Less Safe: The Dismantling of Public Information Systems
after September 11
Harry Hammitt, Access Reports, Inc., USA
Chapter III
Expanding Privacy Rationales under the Federal Freedom of Information Act: Stigmatization as Talisman........................................... 42
Charles N. Davis, University of Missouri School of Journalism, USA

Chapter IV
Access to Information and the Freedom to Access:
The Intersection of Public Libraries and the USA PATRIOT Act .......... 57
Lauren Teffeau, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, USA
Megan Mustafoff, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, USA
Leigh Estabrook, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, USA

Chapter V
Watching What We Read: Implications of Law Enforcement Activity in Libraries since 9/11 ................................. 91
Abby A. Goodrum, School of Journalism at Ryerson University, Canada

Section III: Security, Technology, and Democracy

Chapter VI
Resisting Government Internet Surveillance by Participating in Politics Online and Offline................................................................. 129
Brian S. Krueger, University of Rhode Island, USA

Chapter VII
Security, Sovereignty, and Continental Interoperability:
Canada’s Elusive Balance ................................................................. 153
Jeffrey Roy, Dalhousie University, Canada

Chapter VIII
Information Technology and Surveillance: Implications for Public Administration in a New World Order ......................... 177
Akhalque Haque, University of Alabama at Birmingham, USA

Chapter IX
The Little Chip That Could: The Public Sector and RFID.................. 186
David C. Wyld, Southeastern Louisiana University, USA
Chapter X
Out of Control? The Real ID Act of 2005 ........................................... 226

Todd Loendorf, North Carolina State University, USA

About the Contributors .................................................................................................. 251

Index .............................................................................................................................. 256