Acknowledgment

The authors would like to acknowledge all those who made this work possible. This includes the scholars who have worked tirelessly to bring the topic of rural library services to the forefront, and those that are committed to promoting literacy and access to reading materials as a human right, not a privilege. The most important contributions are from those that live and work in these rural areas and work with the libraries on a daily basis. Many people have been involved in the research projects described in this book – each endeavor would have been impossible to complete without their dedication and commitment.

Valeda Dent would like to thank Lauren Yannotta for her work on the very first research study on the Kitengesa Community Library’s impact back in 2004. Valeda would also like to thank the teachers and staff at the Kitengesa Comprehensive Secondary School, the Masaka High School, the Sseke Secondary School, the members of the Nyendo Reading Group, and the Women’s Group at the Kitengesa Community Library.

Geoff Goodman and Valeda Dent would like to thank Ugandan counterparts who recruited participants (Ssentume Julius, Baker Ssewanyana, Nakyato Gorreth), Lugandan translators (Ssentume Julius, Baker Ssewanyana, Nanyonjo Halima, Nakayiba Sophia, Bitty Namala), caregiver interviewers (Karen Guibert, Danielle Sauro, Chantal Watler, Eric Yellin), child interviewers (Melissa Schroeder, Eric Yellin), Ugandan Project Coordinator (Ssentume Julius), as well as the American Project Team from the Clinical Psychology Doctoral Program at Long Island University. The authors express gratitude to the Chairman of Ggulama, Mukasa Vincent Kakungulu, for granting permission to conduct this research study in Ggulama and for assisting with participant recruitment. The authors also gratefully acknowledge the cooperation of the children and caregivers who participated in this study.

Geoff and Valeda would also like to thank the International Psychoanalytical Association Research Advisory Board and the Long Island University Research Fund for providing two generous grants. Paul Forestell, Provost at Long Island University, also provided generous student support. Finally, the authors wish to express their deep appreciation to Dr. Kate Parry, Co-Founder of the Kitengesa Community Library, for her wisdom and mentorship. Dr. Parry continues working to establish a framework that will allow those in other rural areas to establish their own libraries.

Michael Kevane would like to acknowledge that Alain Sissao and Felix Compaoré of the Institut National des Sciences des Sociétés contributed significantly to the research and analysis presented in Chapter 9. Some of the results reported were previously published in French in Promotion de la Lecture au Burkina Faso: Enjeux et Défis (2012). Funding from the Leavey School of Business and a Presidential Research grant from Santa Clara University is gratefully acknowledged. Kevane would also like to acknowledge that Francesca LeBaron, Nicolas Ruiz, and Lucas Aligire (FAVL/CESRUD representative in Sumbrungu) organized, implemented, and collected data on the reading camps research program in Ghana reported on in chapter 10. Francesca and Nicholas contributed significantly to the drafting of the initial report on the camps. Program funding from the Chen Yet-Sen Family Foundation and research funding from the Leavey School of Business at Santa Clara University are gratefully acknowledged. A Willem and Maria Roelandts Fellowship from the Center for Science, Technology and Society at Santa Clara University supported the research presented in chapter 11. Numerous persons contributed to running of programs reported on in chapters 8-11. Koura Donkoui, Sanou Dounko, Emily Crofton, Charley Casler, Elisée Saré, and Halidou Boué (in Burkina Faso), and Bernard Akulga, Jennifer Ayamdoor, Darius Asanga, Laura Bisbee, and Lauren Bizzari (in Ghana) deserve special recognition for their hard work and dedication. Olivia Ho was a great research assistant at Santa Clara University.

Valeda F. Dent
Long Island University, USA

Geoff Goodman
Long Island University, USA

Michael Kevane
Santa Clara University, USA