Acknowledgment

I would like to thank everyone involved in the production of this book, without whose help the process would have been daunting. My thanks especially go to the publishing team at IGI Global, whose contributions throughout the whole process from inception of the initial proposal to final publication have been invaluable, in particular to Austin DeMarco, who assisted in keeping this project on schedule and providing me with motivation and encouragement throughout. I am also thankful to my Australian editors, Tersia Parsons and Catherine Karcher, whose professional editing abilities and creative suggestions contributed to the final format of the book. My thanks also go to the two anonymous reviewers who provided constructive and comprehensive reviews, informing the final contents of the book.

The research for this book culminated from a desire to marry my love of books and the law, and I am greatly indebted to those people who helped me on this journey of discovery. A very special thanks goes to my husband, Angelo, for his unwavering love and patience as I sat glued to the keyboard for days on end, and to both Angelo and my son, Matt, for their constant inspiration and support.

In particular, I am grateful to my PhD supervisors, Associate Professor Jane Johnston and Professor William van Caenegem of Bond University, for their advice and positive encouragement during the research. Their insightful recommendations and guidance throughout the development of the project—which formed the basis of this book—are very much appreciated. Finally, I would like to thank each and every author and publisher who generously gave of their time and energy during the research interview process, including the authors who took the time to complete the online survey. The project would not have been possible without their participation, and I thank them for their support.
