Acknowledgment

I am grateful to all the authors and reviewers who share my passion for diverse and innovative collaboration and community, were open and receptive to feedback from several distinct perspectives, and devoted themselves to improving the content and presentation of this book’s chapters. I want to extend a special thanks to the staff at IGI Global, particularly Christine and Vince, as well as all others who assisted with publication. I could count on them to be delightfully positive and generous with their support.

I was fortunate to be born in the U.S. to a family of three languages and many cultures who encouraged freedom, adventure, creative expression, learning, and excellence, and courageously advocated that all should share these precious opportunities. As a result, I, along with two women classmates, was recognized for achievement in math and physics at a young age. Not until I became a professional, many years later, did I realize that not all women in the U.S were so fortunate. My family’s multicultural and global diversity has continued to grow with innovation and concern for others at its heart. I dedicate this book to them along with my students and colleagues who are pioneering the joys and possibilities of a diverse innovative life.

Nancy D. Erbe
California State University, USA