About the Contributors

Vikas Kumar received M Sc. in Electronics from Kurukshetra University, Haryana, India. This was followed by M Sc in Computer Science and further Ph. D. from the same university. Along with the two books, He has more than 100 research papers to his credit in various national and international conferences and journals. His areas of interest include Cloud Computing, ICT for Development and Electronic Communication.

Jakob Svensson is holding a position of associate professor in Media and Communication Studies at Uppsala University. Dr. Svensson directs the MA program in Digital Media and Society. His research focuses on two main areas, political participation on digital media platforms and mobile communication in developing regions.

***

Katherine P. Balmeo is an Information Technology Professional, and she handles the Pinoy Rice Knowledge Bank and infomediary4d.com websites. The PRKB is a portal that contains most information one has to know about rice farming in the Philippines. The www.infomediary4d.com is the website that contains all activities of the Infomediary Campaign as well as some resources on infomediary-related research studies.

Jayson P. Berto is a development communication practitioner and a team member of the Infomediary Campaign. His research interests are information and communications technology for development and use of audiovisuals for development.

Marco Briziarelli studies critical approaches to media and communication theory, especially as these fields intersect with broader issues in political and social theory, intellectual and cultural history. Dr. Briziarelli is also interested in media and social movements and critical conceptualization of digital labor. His work has appeared in Communication and Critical/Cultural Studies; Critical Studies in Media Communication; Triple C; Continuum: Journal of Media & Cultural Studies; Journalism; Handbook on Global Media and Communication Policy. He is the author of the books The Red Brigades and the Discourse of Violence: Revolution and Restoration, and the soon to be published Gramsci, Communication and Social Change.
About the Contributors

Raul Alberto Caceres started his professional life as an Engineer. In 2006, after receiving the Online Volunteer of the Year Award from the United Nations, Raul decided to change his career to work in different parts of the world helping others use technology for social good. Using information and communication technologies, he has driven the development of multiple education and community-based enterprises across Africa and the Asia Pacific region. Raul is also an active member of the open government data movement in Australia and has received numerous awards at various developer challenges.

Ahmed El Gody. Ph.D., is a Senior Lecturer in the Media and Communication Department and director of Journalism Connected Master’s Program, at Orebro University Sweden. His recent research foci are new media and democratic process in the Middle East and Africa, social media and civic movements, and the changing role of the journalism profession. His recent research is published in Journalism Studies, Digital Journalism, and New Media and Society. His recent publications include Journalism in a network: role of ICTs inside Egyptian newsrooms.

Julen Figueras, with a background in law and political sciences, received a MA in Human Rights from Malmö University (Sweden) in 2013. He currently lives in Spain, combining his studies in Communication for Development while working at a local NGO that deals with women’s rights. His research interests revolve around social movements, new political parties and how information and communication technologies affect political participation, as he is currently interested in pursuing a doctorate in this field.

Christian Jensen holds a Ph.D. in computer science from Université Joseph Fourier (Grenoble, France), a M.Sc. in computer science from the University of Copenhagen (Denmark) and an M.A. (jure officii) from Trinity College Dublin (Ireland). He is an associate professor at the Department of Applied Mathematics & Computer Science at the Technical University of Denmark, where he teaches and conducts research in the area of security in open distributed systems. For the past 15 years, he has focused on trust-based methods and technologies to secure collaboration among entities in open distributed system. This work addresses all 3 As in AAA: Authentication, where he has pioneered work in virtual anonymity and entity recognition; Access control policies and mechanisms that build on the human notion of trust; and Accountability through reputation and recommendation systems.

Yowei Kang (Ph.D.) is Assistant Professor at Degree Program of Creative Industries and Digital Film, Kainan University, Taiwan. His research interests focus on digital game research; technology and rhetoric; composition pedagogy using digital game technology; and teaching English as a second language (ESL).

Caroline Wamala Larsson divides her time between three interrelated positions: - Director for the HumanIT Research Center – Karlstad University - Senior lecturer with the center for Gender Research – Karlstad University - Program Manager with the Swedish Program for ICT in Developing Regions, Spider (Stockholm University, DSV). Located in the Gender and Technology discipline, Caroline’s research focuses on the use of Information Communication Technologies in development (ICT4D) processes where she uses gender as a point of analysis. Specifically acknowledging the mutual construction of gender and technology, Caroline’s research contributes to a deeper understanding of the cultural embeddeness of ICT. Or put simply, ICTs (Technologies) are rarely neutral entities, they are themselves cultural enterprises. Caroline is situated in both the practical and academic development of ICT4D, where ICT4D is the focal point in the three positions she holds.
Jaime Albarillo Manalo IV holds a Master of Communication in the field of Communication for Social Change degree from the University of Queensland, Australia. He has presented and written papers for national and international conferences on information and communications technology for development. He has also written papers on the same area in refereed journals. He is leading a campaign on mobilizing young individuals to become infomediaries for farmers. Youth and ICTs, youth engagement in agriculture, and development informatics are his research interests. He maintains a blog on development communication for young development communication practitioners http://devcomjourney.blogspot.com/.

Sergei Medvedev is currently a research assistant in transmedia storytelling at the National Research University Higher School of Economics, Russia. He received his M.A. degree in creative industries from the Higher School of Economics for his thesis on “Transmediality of The Voice Russia.” He also holds a B.A. degree in journalism.

Qasim Rajpoot is a PhD candidate at the Technical University of Denmark. He received his Master’s degree in Computer Security from University of Birmingham, UK in 2007. He has been a visiting scholar at the University of Texas at San Antonio, USA and has worked as an intern at the Hewlett-Packard Labs, Bristol, UK where he focused on securely managing cryptographic keys exploiting trusted computing. He has also worked as a lecturer at the School of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science, National University of Sciences and Technology (NUST), Islamabad, Pakistan. His research interests include privacy protection, information security and access control.

Renira Rampazzo Gambarato is currently Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Communications, Media and Design at the National Research University Higher School of Economics, in Moscow, Russia. Originally from Brazil, she has studied and worked also in Germany, Canada, Qatar and Estonia. Her Post-doctorate in Film Studies is from Concordia University, Canada and she holds a PhD in Communication and Semiotics from Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo, Brazil and Kassel University, Germany; a MA in Communication and Semiotics also from Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo and a BA in Industrial Design from São Paulo State University, Brazil. Visit her Web page http://talkingobjects.org.

Kelly Royds is a PhD Candidate at the University of New South Wales, Australia. Her work and research for the past eight years has focused on the use of participatory media for social justice and development education. Her doctoral study explores the intersections of childhood, participatory media and international development.

Fredierick M. Saludez is an agriculturist, text center agent, and rice specialist. He leads the technical component of the Infomediary campaign, particularly conducted of capacity building activities for teachers of the campaign’s participating schools.

Emily Stacey is a doctoral candidate at Swansea University (Wales) in Political and Cultural Studies. Her research focuses on the use of digital technologies in contemporary protest movements and revolutions. Her studies have included the Oxford Internet Institute Summer Doctoral Program (2014) and the Digital Methods Initiative Summer School (2013). Most recently, Emily has given presentations at the Media and Arab Spring Conference in Ifrane, Morocco.
About the Contributors

Shefali Virkar is a research student at the University of Oxford, UK, currently working for a D.Phil. in Politics. Her doctoral research seeks to explore the growing use of Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs) to promote better governance in the developing world, with special focus on the political and institutional impacts of ICTs on local public administration reform in India. Shefali holds an M.A. in Globalisation, Governance and Development from the University of Warwick, UK. Her Master’s thesis analysed the concept of the Digital Divide in a globalising world, its impact developing countries and the ensuing policy implications. At Oxford, Shefali is a member of Keble College.

Kenneth C.C. Yang is a Professor at the Department of Communication. As a native of Taiwan, Dr. Yang’s research focuses on consumer behavior in East Asia, new media and advertising, and impacts of new media in Asian countries.