About the Contributors

Tomaž Deželan is Associate Professor of Political Science at the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Ljubljana, Slovenia, and a researcher at the Centre for Political Science Research at the same faculty. He is an associate researcher at the University of Edinburgh, School of Law, where he acts as a country expert in the Citsee project. His research interests include citizenship concepts, debates and regimes, new modes of governance, parliamentary cohesion, electoral studies, youth, gender and civil society. He has authored or co-authored more than 20 peer reviewed articles in international journals and scientific volumes and 3 scientific monographs. He has experience with international research projects and networks, either as co-responsible or as a researcher. Past projects he worked on have been funded by the Slovenian research agency, European Union’s FP6 framework, European Science Foundation of the European Union and various other national agencies.

Igor Vobič is Assistant Professor of Journalism Studies at the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Ljubljana in Slovenia, and a researcher at the Social Communication Research Centre at the same faculty. His research interests include social communication in contemporary media environment, journalism and new media articulations, and online news production. He has a member of the editorial board of the journal Medijska istraživanja/ Media Research and has recently published in Journalism Studies, Journalism Practice, Journalism, Convergence and Javnost–The Public.

***

Lázaro M. Bacallao-Pino is a postdoctoral fellow at the National Autonomous University of Mexico (Postdoctoral Fellowship Programme, UNAM). He earned his PhD in Sociology at the University of Zaragoza in 2012. His main research interests include communication and power relationships, as well associal movements, mainly the communication dimension and the use of ICTs.

Camelia-Mihaela Cmeciu is an associate professor in the Department of Cultural Anthropology and Communication Studies at the Faculty of Journalism and Communication Studies, University of Bucharest, Romania and a postdoctoral researcher at the Romanian Academy (Iași Branch). Her research interests cover semiotics, organizational and political communication, advertising discourse and linguistics. She is the author of Strategii persuasive în discursul politic (Persuasive Strategies in Political Discourse, 2005, Universitas XXI, Iași, Romania) and Semiotici textuale (Textual Semiotics, 2011, Institutul European, Iași, Romania). Her work on political discourse, social semiotics and organizational discourse appears

Marta Pérez Escolar is a PhD student at the Faculty of Social Sciences and Communication, Catholic University of Murcia. Her research interests focus on cyber-activism, political participation, civic engagement, activism, social demonstrations and civil protests.

Helin Alagöz Gessler holds a Ph.D in EU Politics and International Relations from the EU Institute of Marmara University in Istanbul since 2012. She worked as lecturer and researcher at universities in Istanbul and Berlin. Currently, she is working as a lecturer at the Business and Information Technology School Berlin and conducting independent research.

Justin Holmes is an assistant professor of Political Science at the University of Northern Iowa. His research focuses on how people obtain and use information to form opinions about the political world, and is particularly interested in the intersection of communication technology and the psychology of opinion formation. He has published in a number of journals including Presidential Studies Quarterly and Political Psychology.

Shaohai Jiang is a PhD student from the department of communication at Texas A&M University. He received MA in Communication and New Media from City University of Hong Kong. Before his doctoral studies, he worked as a communication officer for Oxfam Hong Kong. He has a strong interest in new media, particularly how the Internet influences political communication and health communication. Specifically, he is interested in civic engagement and social media in China. His research also deals with how Internet use can help improve people’s health outcome.

Alem Maksuti is a PhD candidate at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Ljubljana. His dissertation examines the idiosyncrasy of Slovenian election campaigns during the democratic post-communist period. His current areas of interest concentrate on the impact of Internet technologies on the transformation of Slovenian political actors’ political communication practices. His broader research interests lie in the areas of political communication, political participation, political culture, and election campaigns. He has authored/co-authored one monograph, several scientific papers, articles published in indexed journals, as well as chapters on elections and political communication in Slovenia.

Ramona McNeal is an associate professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Northern Iowa. Her chief research interests include e-government, telehealth, campaign finance reform and telecommunications policy. She also studies the impact of technology on participation, including its relationship to voting, elections, and public opinion. She has published work in a number of journals including Journal of Information Technology & Politics, Social Science Quarterly, Policy Studies Journal, Public Administration Review, Political Research Quarterly and State Politics and Policy Quarterly. She is a co-author of Digital Citizenship: The Internet, Society and Participation (MIT Press, 2007) with Karen Mossberger and Caroline Tolbert.
Maria Francesca Murru, PhD, is a Post-Doctoral researcher at Catholic University of Milan, Faculty of Political Sciences. She is currently working as a researcher at OssCom, an academic research centre for media and communication based at the same university. Her research fields include civic participation in online public spheres, media and children.

Stamatis Poulakidakos is a Senior Research Associate and Teaching Assistant at the Department of Communication and Media Studies of the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens.

Ashik Shafi is a second year doctoral student at Department of Communication at Wayne State University. He did his masters from Texas Tech University and worked as a newspaper reporter in Bangladesh. His research areas include political discussion on the Internet, new media journalism and media in the developing world.

Pantelis Vatikiotis is an Associate Professor of Sociology of Media in the Department of Media and Communication, Faculty of Communication, at Izmir University of Economics, Turkey. He received his degree in Sociology from Panteion University of Social and Political Sciences, Athens, Greece in 1997 and he did his postgraduate studies in Media and Communication at the University of Westminster, London in 2001. He received his PhD in Media Studies (Alternative/Grassroots Media Practices) from the University of Westminster in 2004. He has taught at the: University of Westminster, University of Ioannina, Panteion University, New York College of Athens, Business College of Athens, and he has worked in media industry as programmer/scheduler for SKAI TV Channel. In 2010 he joined Izmir University of Economics where he teaches in BA and MA programs. Since 2011 he is coordinator of the ‘Erasmus Program’ and coordinator of the MA program ‘Media and Communication’. He is member of international Sociological and Media/Communication associations. His research interests cover the areas of social theory and media, political communication and culture, political economy of media, alternative media, collective action, globalization, new media and cyberculture. His publications include several book chapters and journal articles in international academic publications on the subjects of democratization of communication, public sphere and civil society, grassroots media practices, social movements, social media, and TV programming/scheduling.

Anastasia Veneti is a Lecturer in Marketing Communications at the Media School, Bournemouth University.

Lucia Vesnic-Alujevic is an independent researcher in the field of digital communications and online politics. After obtaining her PhD from Ghent University in 2011, she has worked as a Visiting Fellow at the Centre for European Studies and a postdoctoral researcher at the European Commission’s Joint Research Centre. Her research interests include political communication, new technologies, online communication and political participation.

Fred Vultee is an associate professor of journalism in the Wayne State University Department of Communication.