About the Author

Mamood Shah is regional director, Institute of International Business (IIB) & SL at the Lancashire Business School. Previously he has held academic posts at Cranfield University and the University of Hertfordshire, both in the United Kingdom. He has also acted as a consultant to several UK and International banks on e-banking management related issues. He received a PhD in e-banking from Brunel University, a MRes in Innovative Manufacturing from Cranfield University and a BSc (Hons) in Information Systems from University of Bedfordshire, all in the United Kingdom. He has published papers in several high quality journals such as the European Journal of Information Systems and the International Journal of Information Management. His other research interests include mobile government, online security and technology alignment.

Steve Clarke received a BSc in economics from The University of Kingston Upon Hull, an MBA from the Putteridge Bury Management Centre, The University of Luton, and a PhD in human centered approaches to information systems development from Brunel University – all in the United Kingdom. He is professor of Information Systems in the University of Hull Business School. Steve has extensive experience in management systems and information systems consultancy and research, focusing primarily on the identification and satisfaction of user needs and issues connected with knowledge management. His research interests include: social theory and information systems practice; strategic planning; and the impact of user involvement in the development of management systems. Major current research is focused on approaches informed by critical social theory.